Report:

There seems to be a lot of cards here, but most of them are actually the same cards used in different scenarios. I didn't change the homepage cards nor the descriptor page cards, mainly because the true content comes from the quotes; that's why I chose to sort the quote cards into emotional descriptor categories.

I used two people to help me sort a variety of the motivational quotes. I let them sort the cards freely, into whatever categories they wanted to make. They created categories such as "Hard Work", "Humbleness", and "Trueness to oneself". Using simple analysis, I created two more categories, "Thinking about the Future" and "Wanting to improve myself", which I felt were sufficient to cover many of these categories. For example, every card in the "Humbleness" category went into the "Wanting to improve myself" category.

My simple analysis was basically taking larger, more ambiguous categories to cover the many categories that the two participant card sorters had created. That way, I would have fewer categories to make and more content for each category.
